The Japanese Society of East-Asian Associated Literature has established a school in China for the purpose of encouraging progress in that country and improving its relations with Japan. The school has been duly organized in Nanking, and has proved so successful that the Society has now decided to invite Major-General Sato—then Colonel Sato—distinguished himself greatly in the war of 1894-5, but, having lost a leg from a very serious wound, he became in appointed for active service. He has accepted the post now offered to him, and it is justly anticipated that his presence at the school will add materially to its prestige. Such an appointment must be interpreted as indicative of a military element in the school's course.

The special correspondent of the Times at Mafeking, in describing the last unsuccessful sortie made by the garrison, writes:—At the conclusion of the work I addressed several Ill-kept, tattered, dirty, but physically fine men. Many of them, however, were undersized, and almost all wore beards. These men referred me to their Field Cornet, who declared that they did not use explosive bullets. Upon being shown the horrible severity of the wounds, the Field Cornet admitted that at one time explosive bullets had been served out, but declared it was not possible that they could have been used this morning, since he was certain they had been previously expended. He then produced a bandolier filled with Dum Dum bullets, upon which I pointed out that, so far as Mafeking was concerned, they had been recalled. A little later, when we were attending some further wounded, I called the attention of the Field Cornet to the fact that four of his men were rifling the bodies of our dead. Upon seeing this he expressed his regret to Surgeon-Major Anderson, and explained to me that he was unable to accept responsibility for the acts of his men since, although they had instructions to respect the dead, the younger ones were so unruly as to be beyond his control. The Field Cornet then proceeded to assert that our own troops had stripped the body of General Koch, and left him to lie upon the field wounded and naked, adding that we were morally responsible for the subsequent death of this Boer general. This opinion was loudly endorsed by a number of the enemy who had begun to collect round us. One of these men stated that orders had been given to him by Field Cornet Botha to take possession of anything found upon the wounded and dead, and, upon my confronting this man with the other Field Cornet, quite a lively altercation in Dutch ensued. The former of the two then denied that certain orders had been given by Field Cornet Botha, adding that none of his men had robbed any of the dead, and were merely engaged in removing ammunition and side-arms. I then pointed out to him the bodies of five of our men, whose pockets had been turned inside out and who were at that moment being brought up under an escort of the enemy. He was also confronted with three of our wounded, who declared that they had had their personal effects stolen, their rings taken from their fingers, and their money from their pockets. This did not please the Boer, who declared that, although the dead had been very brave men, he would have been pleased to have seen more killed, and that the combined forces of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State were equal, if not superior, to ours.

H.M.S. Orlando will leave for Manila on Monday.

The crest of the hills at Kowloon beyond Stonecutters' Island was brilliantly illuminated last night, attracting much attention. Apparently the grass had been fired by some charcoal burners.

The following team will constitute Lowson's XI. v. Laughorne's XI. in the cricket match to-day at 11.30 a.m.:—Woodgates, J. A. Lowson, P. A. Cox, W. H. Moule; A. G. Moule, D. Wood, F. Maitland, K. W. Mounsey, E. T. Lee, and two more.

Though prosecution under the new Ordinance for the Protection of Women and Girls have only been instituted since the 8th of December, 1899, about 40 cases have already been before the Magistrate, and fines amounting in the aggregate to about $450 imposed. Four cases were dealt with on Thursday. Three of the defendants were fined $50 each, the fourth being discharged.

GENERAL BULLER'S ATTACK.

It is unofficially reported that a feint frontal attack was made on the Boers by General Buller's forces on Monday at Tugela. In the meantime the Durham Light Infantry delivered a main attack on the extreme right, surprising the enemy and capturing Krantzkloof.

[The feint frontal attack delivered by the British explains the news from Boer sources wired by Reuter for the Volunteer Gazette service on Thursday, in which the Boers declared they had repelled the British in confusion. While they were engrossed in repelling a prearranged retreat, the Durhams took a strong position.]

LATEST NEWS.

The latest news from the scene of action is that the Boers occupying Doornkop and Spionkop are infilading the British.

Our casualties are estimated at 250 killed and wounded.

From Boer accounts the fire of the British artillery was the fiercest they have as yet experienced.

THE WAR.—THE RECENT FIGHTING.

The Standard's Correspondent says that General Lyttleton's Brigade was engaged in the main attack at the Tugela river and that the Durhams and Rifle Brigade carried two kopjes at the point of the bayonet and bivouacked on the spot.

The Times Correspondent says that the enemy on Tuesday afternoon were successful at the Northern end of the kopjes, but re-inforcements arriving the position was recarried by the bayonet.

Reuter's Correspondent at Spearmon's Camp Wednesday evening says that General Buller began the advance on Monday, and making a feint frontal attack advanced towards Brakfontein. The Boers opened fire at 11 o'clock with artillery and sent several shells into the infantry, who retired an hour later. In the meantime the British attacked vigorously on the extreme right, and the Engineers quickly constructed a pontoon bridge while cannon, hidden in the trees, bombarded the Boer position heavily, and the infantry advanced. The Boers were completely surprised and the high hill, a continuation of the Brakfontein range, was captured by 4 p.m.

GENERAL MACDONALD'S BRIGADE.

The Standard's Correspondent at Koppiesdam, 5th instant, says that General Macdonald's Highland Brigade, a Field Battery and the 9th Lancers arrived yesterday at Koodoesberg and now hold both banks of the River. The arrival of the force was opportune as it prevented two large Boer Commandos from joining. The Highland Light Infantry is bivouacked on the North bank of the River.

THE FATALITY ON THE "WHEELING."

PRACTICAL BRITISH SYMPATHY.

In connection with the recent explosion on board the U.S. gunboat Wheeling, which occurred when a salute was being fired in honour of the birthday of the German Emperor, resulting in Gunner's mate Campbell being killed and Lieut.-Commander Beatty, Gunners Nelson, Bite and Conray, being injured, several British residents have given practical expression of their sympathy. H.E. Sir Henry Blake and several other gentlemen, made up the sum of $1,000, which has been transmitted to the relatives of Campbell. Captain Burwell and the officers of the Wheeling expressed their gratitude and communicated the matter to Admiral Watson, who also wrote thanking the donors. Admiral Watson and the officers of the Wheeling then paid a call on H.E. the Governor, and further expressed their appreciation. The incident, coming so recently after the baseball match by the American sailors, which contributed $535 to the South African Widows' and Orphans' Fund, certainly illustrates better than all the talking in the world, the sympathetic and friendly feeling existing between the British and Americans in the Far East.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

On Monday the great dramatic event of the season will be upon us, when the curtain will run up to disclose the first performance of the "Yeoman of the Guard." The show is being anxiously awaited for, and as the management promise six performances there is apparently no question as to its success. From the programme already circulated the chorus is one of the strongest yet secured and the energy of the popular musical director can go a long way to make rough places plain. The piece is one of Sir Arthur Sullivan's best, and the music is very attractive. The leaders, judging from the rehearsals, seem to know their parts very well, and have proved their ability in past theatricals. Therefore we poor outlanders who have neither the ability to act nor the voice to sing look forward to a bright and enjoyable entertainment, and promise a bumper house.

* * * * *

There is no doubt that the Jockey Club has done a very unpopular thing in increasing the charge of admission to the races. It is all very well to adopt measures that point to exclusiveness if you are under no obligations and have the wherewithal to keep them up. But exclusiveness is a selfish policy and rightly finds no public support. The Race Meeting is more or less a public institution, and has been made so by the support of the public in the past, both by contributions in admission fees and in the general interest displayed in the many meetings. All the public are not in the affluent positions they would wish to be, and it is bad enough to have necessities such as houserent jumping up periodically 100 per cent. without one's occasional luxuries doing likewise. The Race Club owes a duty to the public as well as to its own exchequer, and a reversion to the old price of admission would commend itself to many, even to those who are able to pay the enhanced fee. The difference in revenue caused by the "anti-gambling crusade among the heathens" might be recuperated in other ways. The race-meetings are events which help to make life liveable in Hongkong, are public institutions in fact, and every possible facility should be provided for everybody to witness them in comfort and enjoyment.

* * * * *

Discussing horse-racing as an institution, may I be excused for quoting an eulogy of the late Duke of Westminster, who was one of England's first racing men. The races here are of course not frequented with the many evils that attend a meeting at home, though there may be some difference of opinion as to the principle of gambling. The reference made by that popular and broad-minded clergyman, the Bishop of Chester, to the position of the late Duke, might be modestly applied to the recent action of the Race Club here in suppressing the many evils attending native gambling.

* * * * *

In the course of a sermon, the Bishop of Chester said there might have been differences of opinion respecting the Duke's conspicuous patronage of horse-racing, with its mean and pernicious multitude of attendant evils, but of one thing they might be absolutely certain, that in this matter, and in other matters as to which thoughtful persons were divided in judgment, the Duke acted conscientiously and under the firm conviction that the policy he pursued was on the whole the wisest and the best. He was by no means blind to the evils, the curses, which haunted the racecourse. They knew how readily he countenanced and supported every judicious effort to reform; how, for example, it was largely to his influential co-operation with Dean Rowson and other public-spirited citizens that Chester during the race week became less the pandemonium it had been. Some of them would have been glad if he had seen his way to condemn even more decisively the ruinous vices of betting and gambling, but the point to understand and remember was that the Duke, with full knowledge of the subject in all its bearings, upheld and cultivated horse-racing not merely or chiefly because he delighted and excelled in it, but because he honestly believed it to be in itself a noble sport, which the nation could not and would not afford to part with, a sport which ought to be elevated, not abolished. Some years ago the topic of racing was discussed among the Leeds clergy, and, taking the Duke as the most conspicuous racing man of the best type, he (the Bishop) raised the question whether it would be right to advise the Duke to withdraw his wholesome and honourable patronage from the sport and leave it to go unchecked to deeper degradation in its own way. The general conclusion was that, if they could, none of them would undertake the responsibility of counselling withdrawal.

* * * * *

We used to hear a good deal about muscular Christians, why should we not hear more of muscular soldiers, asks a writer in a home paper? Not that we should depreciate for one moment the stamina of our forces at the front; but, come to think of it, many of the men have been made what they are by healthy barrack life, good food, and games of cricket and football. Many of them might otherwise have turned out pigeon-chested cab-touts and potboys. Are not athletics, after all, as good a training as drill for what seems likely to be the future type of the fighting man? Take your batsman who has no difficulty in hitting a half-volley to leg for four; or your Rugby halfback, picking up the ball heeled out from the scrum, are not these the men to make soldiers? The fact is—and we are beginning to realise it no that we find that we can sustain reverses at the hands of men who never learnt the goose step—that your real soldier is the man who rides and shoots, plays cricket and football, rows, fences, boxes, can hold his own at racquets or pole, or what you will, so long as it is a game requiring pluck, endurance, and a clear eye. Of course the man must be trained, that goes without saying. But there is the material, and, given proper facilities—that is where the rub comes in—there can be no doubt that the youths of the British Empire, who stand alone all-round outdoor athletes, could make up such a citizen army as the world has never seen—perhaps because it has never thought about it.

* * * * *

It will perhaps interest our local volunteer artillery to know that a long and very valuable discussion has been going in on the Times and by the last mail appeared in particular two well-inspired letters, one signed "Iguotus," one "Ubique," which ought to be read by everyone who desires to understand the facts. They are such as have pointed out more than once—that it is a complete delusion to suppose that our field artillery has been "out-classed" or "out-ranged" by the Boer field artillery. What has happened has been that Sir George White's army, intended for manœuvring in the open country, has been caught and enclosed within an open town not designed for the work of a fortress, not therefore armed with heavy guns for the purposes of defence, and that under those circumstances, taking advantage of the unbroken railway behind it, the Boer Army has been able to drag up into position the kind of guns that would be used in a regular siege. It is impossible to obtain field guns that shall be sufficiently mobile for the work required of them in assisting to defeat an army in the field, and that they shall at the same time be heavy enough to meet the kind of weapons that are used in regular siege work. Despite such occasional disasters as we have just been reported from Ladysmith, where a shell, falling upon an officers' messhouse, killed one and severely wounded several other officers, the Boer artillery has been generally very ineffective.

* * * * *

A party, two of whom were high officials of a great Continental Power, returned a few day's since from an excursion as far as Wuchow and related some rather exciting experiences, one of which was a threatened attack by pirates. Unfortunately the rapidity with which the call to arms was responded to and the guns manned caused the pirate fleet to beat a hasty retreat. I say unfortunately, because had fight been shown it would probably have resulted in one of two consummations devoutly to be wished: the return of the foreigners to Canton and Hongkong with the pirates hanging to the yardarm, that is supposing their vessel had a yardarm, and, for the wounding of one of the aforesaid high officials, the consequent opening in reality of the West River. No doubt, as in duty bound, they would have been ready to have died for their country, but a slight flesh wound would have been sufficient, and the trade of Hongkong, which is as open to their countrymen as it is to British subjects, would have had a great spurt and permanent augmentation which it will never have while the British Foreign Office is under the thumb of "the great I.G."

* * * * *

During the course of the voyage our friends met one of the British gunboats which are patrolling the West River to search for pirates, and, should they meet any, to report to the Admiral and probably to the Commissioner of Customs, who, in their turn, are to report to London and Peking, and through whom, after due enquiries have been made and answered by telegraph and post, instructions will be conveyed to the commander of the gunboat as to whether he is to attack the pirate or not. As becomes friendly nations meeting in foreign waters the flag would have been dipped, but for the fact that the commander of the continental craft had nailed his colours to the mast. This was unfortunate, but we forgive it, because it indicates the spirit that we Britishers claim for ourselves and like to see in others. It proves that while we have a big navy and a small army, and our Continental cousins a big army and a small navy, their little navy, like the little British army, goes a d——long way.

* * * * *

I almost forgot to mention another catastrophe which befell the party. They took turns at night watch, and one of them before going to sleep, while he was supposed to be on this duty, drank, unbeknown to himself of course, all the whisky that was left on board.

CAPTAIN DEASY'S EXPLORATIONS IN CENTRAL ASIA.

Captain H. H. P. Deasy has arrived in London after spending two years in exploring and survey work in Central Asia. The following are some particulars of Captain Deasy's various journeys, and of the results which he has obtained.

Captain Deasy left Sritigar early in September, 1897, with the object of following the Yarkand river from the west end of Ruskam northwards, and carefully surveying its hitherto unexplored stretches, and as much of the adjacent country as possible. He travelled by way of Gilghit, Hunza, and the Taghdumbash Pamir. Captain Deasy had taken the precaution of obtaining a passport from the Tsung-li-Yamen, and through Mr. George Macartney, who is the British Representative at Kashgar, had informed the Tsotai, or Governor, of Sin-chiang of his intention to travel to Yarkand by way of the valley of the Yarkand river. Public orders had been sent to the chief Chinese official at Tashkurghan that every assistance was to be rendered to Captain Deasy, but, as is so frequently the case with Chinese officials, secret orders of a precisely contrary effect accompanied the public orders, and Captain Deasy found that the local officials not only rendered him no assistance, but obstructed him by every means in their power. Finding it impossible to descend the valley, he determined to ascend it. After ascending the valley for some distance Captain Deasy was compelled to abandon his journey, and to make direct for Yarkand. He had, however, repeatedly crossed the deep and rapid Yarkand river, and some idea of the difficulties which he and his assistant, Ram Singh, a trained surveyor, whose services were placed at his disposal by the Indian Government, had to encounter, may be gathered from the fact that their camping grounds were often at an elevation of 16,000 feet, and that they were exposed to keen and biting winds with the thermometer often below zero. The journey to Yarkand was made over the Sandal Pass, and at one place all the pack animals—ponies, mules, and yaks—had to be hauled up a steep slope of solid rock.

After resting for some weeks at Yarkand, to enable Ram Singh to recover from an attack of dysentery, Captain Deasy set out again for the unsurvey stretch of the Yarkand river, but owing to a heavy fall of snow, he was unable to cross the Khandar Pass, and was obliged to make a retrograde movement to Kosarab. On reaching this place he found that all the ice had disappeared from the river, and that the banks were so precipitous that even experienced hill climbers could only ascend them in one or two places. It is only in mid-winter, when the river is frozen over, that it is possible to travel through that part of the valley of the Yarkand river lying between the west end of Ruskam and Kosarab. Captain Deasy again returned to Yarkand, where it was necessary to give the baggage animals a rest of some weeks. When they had sufficiently recovered he set out along the line of cases to Khotan, and thence to Polu, with the intention of thoroughly exploring the country south of the Kuen Lun Range, to the westward of the line followed by Roborovsky, and of ascertaining if there were any direct practicable route from Polu other than that leading towards Ladakh in the direction of Central Tibet. He was anxious also to establish a trigonometrical value for the longitudes of the principal places visited, either direct from points fixed by the great Trigonometrical Survey of India, or from peaks whose co-ordinates he had himself determined by triangulation during his previous journey in 1896. He was also desirous of connecting the topographical work of his present journey with that which had been carried out under his supervision two years before, and of accurately determining the heights of as many as possible of the magnificent snow-clad mountains which abound in North-Western Tibet and Aksai Chin.

Polu is situated within the jurisdiction of the Amban of Kerin, who proved to be an obstructionist of the first water. He insisted, both verbally and in writing, that Aksai Chin was Chinese territory, and did not belong to Tibet. He declined to allow Captain Deasy to travel by the direct route through the Polu Gorge, assigning as his reason that the French traveller, Mr. Dutreuil de Rhins, who had been murdered hundreds of miles away, used this route, and that since then it had been closed to every one. But in spite of the obstructive tactics of the local officials, Captain Deasy succeeded in carrying out his programme and brought the triangulation across the high Kuen Lun Range to within a few miles of Polu. The area of country surveyed was not very large, but the co-ordinates of about ninety peaks were determined and the sources of the Khotan river discovered. The return journey to Polu from Aksai Chin was made by the direct route, and the caravan then returned to Yarkand in order to rest the men and animals before making another attempt to reach the unknown part of the Yarkand river.

This last attempt was successful, notwithstanding a repetition of the usual tactics on the part of the Chinese authorities. The Amban of Yarkand, after inspecting the passport given to Captain Deasy by the Tsung li-Yamen, detailed a petty official to accompany the expedition; but no sooner had it left Yarkand than he despatched a letter to the Beg of Sarikol informing him that a British traveller was supposed to be wandering about in the mountains without any passport, and warning the Beg to keep a sharp lookout and to report on the mysterious traveller's movements. The fact appears to be that the Chinese were utterly unable to understand why any one should travel about, at great personal inconvenience, in a most difficult country, among high and precipitous mountains and through the exceedingly narrow and deep intervening valleys. The Tajiks, who inhabit the country commonly, but erroneously called Marion Pamir, and their kinsmen in the neighbouring valleys, acting, no doubt, under instructions, declined to given any information about the direct route leading towards the west end of Ruskam. They also declined to furnish guides, and hoped, no doubt, that Captain Deasy would return to Yarkand. In this, however, they were mistaken. The country consisted of high and precipitous mountains, separating extremely narrow valleys. Some of these valleys are cultivated, but in others the dense jungle makes it almost impossible for the baggage animals to force a passage. Frozen streams added to the difficulties of the journey, and in one valley numerous ice steps had to be cut before the animals could pass. As a matter of fact, the refusal of the Tajiks to render any assistance, while adding to the difficulties of Captain Deasy's journey, immensely increased the value of the work done. He was compelled to cover a larger area of country, and in the end succeeded in accurately surveying all but a few miles of the unknown parts of the Yarkand river. The conditions under which the work was carried out were extremely trying. During the day intensely cold winds blew, the thermometer being often ten degrees below zero at noon, in bright sunshine, and it was only by breaking the force of the wind with rugs, held in position by the porters, that observations could be taken. For nearly a fortnight tents could not be used, the narrow valleys being too rocky, but fortunately sufficient firewood was generally obtainable, and the absence of wind at night somewhat alleviated the situation. In 14 consecutive marches during this journey 11 passes were crossed, averaging about 14,700 feet, while two of them were close on 17,000 feet. The so-called roads scarcely deserved to be described as goat tracks.

After completing his survey of the Yarkand river Captain Deasy went to Kashgar, in order, if possible, to arrange for another journey in the mountains to the south of Polu. In the negotiations with the Taotai Captain Deasy received every assistance from Mr. Macartney, but unfortunately for British interests, and for the comfort of British travellers in Chinese Turkestan, Mr. Macartney's official position is not such as to lend authority to any representations which he may make to the Chinese officials. Mr. Macartney is officially designated "Special Assistant for Chinese Affairs to the Resident in Kashmir," and his official status is, to say the least, somewhat doubtful. But what is perhaps of more practical importance is that Mr. Macartney is not provided with even a single Sepoy by way of escort, while Russia is represented at Kashgar by a Consul-General with an escort of nearly a hundred Cossacks under the command of a Russian officer. It may easily be imagined how difficult is the situation in which Mr. Macartney at times finds himself placed. The Taotai, and even subordinate officials, do not hesitate to remind Mr. Macartney of his want of official status, and of the fact that he has no escort, when it is convenient for them to do so, and it says much for Mr. Macartney's personal influence that he has been able to do as much as he has in fact done to maintain British interests at Kashgar. The system of government in Chinese Turkestan is simplicity itself. The officials receive no salaries from the State. The Taotai, or Governor, must send a certain tribute to Peking. He orders the Amban, or district magistrate, to collect a certain amount in each case, being considerably in excess of the sum remitted to Peking. The Ambans instruct the Begs to collect a certain amount of revenue which will leave them a considerable surplus after satisfying the Taotai. The Begs, in their turn, repeat the process with their subordinate officials, and so the process goes on.

While Captain Deasy was at Kashgar, engaged in endless negotiations with the Taotai, that official informed Mr. Macartney that he had received a telegram from the Tsung li-Yamen ordering him to instruct the Amban of Kerin to afford Captain Deasy due protection and to take such steps as were necessary to secure Captain Mr. Macartney promptly informed the Taotai that he would hold the Taotai personally responsible in the event of Captain Deasy again experiencing any opposition or trouble while in Chinese territory. The Taotai thereupon stated that Captain Deasy was at liberty to travel through any part of Chinese Turkestan, and by any route he might choose. But the practical value of this assurance was quickly discounted, for, on arriving at Khotan, the Amban of that place proved obdurate, and it was only after an urgent appeal had been addressed to Mr. Macartney that Captain Deasy was able to obtain an order authorising him to get transport and supplies as far as Polu. After this experience of the little value that was to be attached to the assurances of the Taotai of Kashgar, Mr. Macartney obtained from the Taotai a written agreement by which the Taotai undertook to forward by express messenger explicit instructions to his subordinates, the Ambans of Khotan and Keria, that the protection was to be afforded Captain Deasy, and in particular that the people of Polu, from whom Captain Deasy must necessarily recruit his porters and guides, were to be informed that they were at perfect liberty to assist the traveller in every way. Armed with a copy of this written engagement, Captain Deasy sought the promised assistance from the Amban of Kerin, but, after several stormy interviews with the officials deputed by the Amban to deal with the matter, all he obtained was an official notification to the people of Polu that they were at liberty to assist the travellers. This notification was made in Captain Deasy's presence, but no sooner was it made than the official privately warned the people that they were on no account to render Captain Deasy any assistance. After some weeks spent in useless negotiations it became quite clear that the Polu people would not venture to disobey the secret instructions of the Amban, and Deasy was compelled to start on a most difficult journey through the mountains without the necessary assistance. His entire caravan experienced the greatest hardships. For four days and nights they were exposed to heavy rain and snow. One of his men died; Ram Singh was incapacitated by a severe attack of rheumatic fever, and Captain Deasy's own health suffered severely. He was therefore compelled to abandon all further work and to return as quickly as possible to India, where he was laid up in hospital for fully two months and is even now very far from being restored to health.

The value of Captain Deasy's work is sufficiently evidenced by the fact that his observations are being plotted out by the officers of the Indian survey, and that the results will be incorporated in the official maps of the department.

MR. DOOLEY.

HIS OPINIONS ON WAR AND WAR MAKERS.

"I tell ye, Hinnissy," said Mr. Dooley, "ye can't do th' English speakin' people. Ourselves an' the hands across th' sea ar-re rapidly teachin' th' benighted Lutheryan an' other haythin that as a race we're obvinciblo and uncatchable. The Anglo-Saxon race meetin's now goin' on in the Philippeens an' South Africa ought to convince anny wan that, give us a fair start, an' we can bate th' wurruld to a tillygraft office.

"Th' war our cousins be Sir Thomas Lipton is prosecutin' as Hogan says again th' foul but accurate Boers is doin more than that. It's givin us a common war litthrachoor. I wuddent believe at first, whin I r-read th' dispatches in th' pa-apers, that me frind Gin'ral Otis wasn't in South Africa. It was on'y whin I see another chapter iv his justly oilly brated seergal story, intitled 'Th Capture iv Porac,' that I know he had an imitator over in th' mother-country. An, be hivins! I like th' English lad's style almost as well as our own gr-reat artist's. Mobbe 'tis as th' pa-apers say, that Otis has writ himself out. Anyhow, th' last chapter isn't thrillin.' He says, 'To-day th' army undher my command fell upon th' inimy with gr-reat slaughter an' seized th' important town of Porac which I have mintioned before, but,' he says, 'we ar-re fortunately now safe in Manila.' Yo, see, he doesn't keep up th' intherest to th' end. 'Th' English pote does bether.

"'Last night at eight o'clock,' he says' 'we found our sleedher but intrepid ar-rmy surrounded by wan hundred thousan' Boers,' he says. 'We attacked thim with gr-reat fury,' he says, 'pursuin' thim up th' almost inaccessible mountain side an' capturin' eight guns, which we didn't want, so we give thim back with siveral iv our own,' he says. 'Th' Irish reg'mintts,' he says—'th' Korry Rifles, th' Lond-Longuers' Own, an' th' Dublin Pote—commanded be th' popular Irish sojer gin'ral Sir Ponson-by Tompkins, wint into battle singin their well-known nayfional anthem—"Mrs. Inneryawkings is a Fust-Class Namio." 'Th' Boers retorted,' he says, 'pursued by th' Davitt Terrors, who cut their way through th' fugitives with awful slaughter,' he says. 'They have now,' he says, 'pinethrated as far as Pretoria,' he says, 'th' officers arrivin in first-class carredges an th' men in thrucks, he says 'an' ar-re camped in th' bottin'shed where they ar-re afforded ivry attinition be th' vanquished inimy,' he says. 'As f'r us,' he says 'we doubled, afther th' victhry, to light out f'r Ladysmith,' he says' 'Th' inimy had similar intintions, he says, 'but their skill has been vastly overrated,' he says. 'We bate thim, 'he says—'we bate thim be thirty miles,' he says.

"That's wore we're strong, Hinnissy. We may get licked on th' battle field, we may be climbin' threes in the Philippines with arrows strikin' in us like quills, as Hogan says, into th' fretful porcupine; or we may be doin' a mile five minyits flat flown th' pike that leads to Cape Town, pursued be the less fleet but more ignorant Boer, puttin' us with guns full iv good an' Bibles; but in th' pages iv histhry 'tint our childhren read we niver turned back on'er an inimy. We make our own glorious pages on th' battle field, an' in th' camp, an' in th' cab'notneetin'."

"Well, 'tis all r-right f'r ye to be jokin'," said Mr. Hennessy, "but there's manny a brave fellow down there that it's no joke to."

"Thrue f'r ye," said Mr. Dooley, "an that's why I wisht it cud be fixed up so't th' men that starts th' wars could do the fightin'. Th' trouble is that all th' preliminaries is arranged be matchmakers, an' all they's left f'r fightin' is to do th' murdhrin.' 'A man's got a good job at home, an' he wants to make it strounger. How can he do it? By throwin' out some wan that's got an okelly good job down th' sthreet. Now the don't go over,' he 'I wud' an say, "Hore-Schwartzmeister (or Kruger, as th' case might be). I don't lik ye'er appearance; ye made a monkey iv me in argymint before th' neighborhood, an' if ye continyue in business ye'll limit me trade, so here goes to more ye into th' sthreet." Not that he said. He got a crowd around him, an' says he:

"'Kruger (or Schwartzmeister, as th' case may be) is no good. To begin with, he's a Dutchman. If that ain't enough, he's a cantin', hymn-singin,' murdherous wretch that wuddent have wan iv our countrymen ate a square meal if he had is way. I'll give ye all two dollars a week if ye'll go over an' destroy him. An' th' other hand, what does he do? He calls in th' neighbours, an' says he: 'Dooley is sindin' down a gang iv savages to murdher me. Do ye fitve your wurruk an' ye'er families an' rally ar-round me, an, where ye see me plug hat wave do ye go in th' other direction,' he says, 'an' slay th' brutal inimy,' he says. An off goes th' sojers an' they most a lot iv lads that look like thimselves an make sounds that's more or less human ar-rates out iv plates, an they swap smokin' tobacco and sing songs togither an th' next day they're in arly jabbing holes in each other with long, cold bayn'ts. An' whin it's all over they's me and Chamberlain at home victoryous, and Kruger and Schwartzmeister at home skelly victoryous. An' they make me prime minister or aldherman, but whin I want a man to put in me coat I don't take one with a wooden leg.

"'I'll niver go down again to see sojers go off to war.' But ye'll see me at th' depot with a brass band which th' men that causes wars starts for th' scene of carnage. Whin Correspons goes forth to th' sun kissed an rain looked isles in th' Passyfic, no mor heartier cheer will be heard than th' war or two that rises from th' bosom iv Martin Dooley. Says I, give thim th' chanist to make histhry and have the young man come home an' make car wheels. I Chamberlain likes war so much, 'tis him that ought to be down there in South Africa, pitchin' over th' road with ol' Kruger chasin him with a hoe. Th' man that likes fightin' ought to be willin to turn in an' spell his fellow-countrymon himself. An' I'd even go this far an' say that if Mark wants to sa-ave th' dum Philippeens—"

"Ye're a thraitor," said Mr. Hennessy.

"I know it," said Mr. Dooley, complacently.

"Ye're an anti-expansionist."

"If ye say that again," cried Mr. Dooley, angrily, "I'll smash ye're head."

SHIPPING REPORTS.

The British steamer Haitoung, from Tamsui Amoy and Swatow 8th Feb., had strong easterly gale, high sea and rainy weather to Amoy. From Amoy to Swatow moderate N.E. wind and sea, cloudy weather. From Swatow to port light breeze and fine clear weather. Steamers in Amoy—Chuangchow. In Swatow—Chihli and Taiwan.

The British steamer Tsinan, from Kobe 1st Feb. and Moji 4th, had heavy gale from N.N.W. with terrific squalls accompanied by hail and snow, very high and confused sea, ship laboured heavily, 5th at 6 p.m. put ship's head to sea and slowed down. All through the night continued heavy gale and sea. 6th at 6 a.m. moderated, put ship on her course again, having moderate N.E. winds and fine weather the rest of passage.

"Did you say the Americans are upon us?" asked the Filipino officer.

"No," answered the chief, "I have just been making some studies in United States slang. I don't think they can be induced to pay us a cent. What I said is that they are on to us."

Further O'Reilly, of Whitwick, who is one of the Liberal members of the Leicestershire County Council, like many others places patriotism before party. Speaking at a meeting convened for the purpose of giving a hearty "send-off" to the local members of the Imperial Leicestershire Yeomanry, he said he was proud to attend the gathering for three reasons—first, as a Irland; secondly, because he was an Imperialist; and thirdly, because he was an Irishman. (Applause.) Some of his countrymen—of whom he was ashamed—deserted the British army, but when he read their speeches he could not help remembering that there were ten regiments of Irish soldiers at the front fighting for the Empire.

THE NEW FRENCH REMEDY

THERAPION.

This successful and highly popular remedy, as employed in the Continental Hospitals by Ricord, Rostan, Jobert, Velpeau and others, combines all the desiderata to be sought in a medicine of the kinds and surpasses everything hitherto employed.

THERAPION No. 1, in a few days only, removes all discharges from the urinary organs, effectually superseding injections, the use of which does irreparable harm by laying the foundation of stricture and other serious diseases. In dysentery, piles, irritation of the lower bowel, cough, bronchitis, asthma, and some of the more trying complaints of this kind, it will be found astonishingly efficacious, affording prompt relief where other well-tried remedies have been powerless.

THERAPION No. 2, for impurity of the blood, scurvy, pimples, spots, blotches, pains and swellings of the joints, secondary symptoms, disease of the bones, sore throat, and all diseases for which it has been too much a fashion to employ mercury, sarsaparilla, &c., to the destruction of the sufferer's three and ruin of health. This preparation purifies the whole system through the blood, and thoroughly eliminates every poisonous matter from the body.

THERAPION No. 3, for nervous exhaustion waste of vitality, and all the distressing consequences arising from early error, excess, residence in hot unhealthy climates, &c. It possesses surprising power in restoring strength and vigour to the debilitated.

THERAPION may be procured at 2/9 and 4/6 per package, of the principal Chemists and Merchants throughout the world. In ordering, the purchaser should state which of the three numbers he requires, and observe that the word "THERAPION" appears on the Government Stamp (in white letters on a red ground, affixed to every genuine package, by order of Her Majesty's Hon. Commissioners, and without which it is a forgery.
